Seven Ways To Get Information For A Background Check
by Mark Aleks

Businesses in today's market have very high risk factors when hiring employees. Many applicants can turn out to be liars, thieves and even criminals.

Due to all the risks of hiring, now over 90% of businesses do background checks on employees. With new technologies and the growth of the internet, background checks have become easier and cheaper than ever before.

Here are the 7 top ways to get information to background check a person.

1.   Social Networks
Myspace, Facebook and LinkedIn are a good place to start. If someone created a profile in one of these networks, it is a great way to find out about someone's lifestyle outside of work.

2.   Credit Reports
Pulling someone's credit report is a good way to find out about spending habits and debts.

3.   Court Records
This way can be tricky due to the fact that you need to know where someone has lived to access their records. If you just take a trip down to the County Courthouse, you'll be able to access someone's records.

4.   Free Online Searches
One of the most popular free online people searches is ZabaSearch. It can be fun to search people on it, however, the information is very limited.

5.   Blog Searches
In today's world people are blogging rather than writing diaries. It's amazing what people will type, post and make viewable to the public. IceRocket has a good blog search to try and find your person and their blog. Do an author search.

6.   Public and Government Database Information Companies
Instead of taking all the time to pull together public and government database info on a person, you can buy a report from a company that sells them such as Intelius.com and UsSearch.com. These reports can be affordable, however, the downside is that these public and government databases are typically outdated and it is highly likely that you'll not get the most accurate information.

7.   Private Investigative Report
Private investigators have access to exclusive reports on people that only 99% of people are able to get as well. These companies not only provide exclusive and highly detailed background reports on people, they also cross reference and usually phone verify information on a person. Most people like to use SearchandExpose.com because they use exclusive private investigator technologies and they are very affordable, similar prices to even UsSearch.com.

If you use the right sources when performing a background search, you will be able to hire better people for your business, therefore increasing your business productivity and profits.

Mark Aleks is a professional website developer and he has extensive knowledge and experience with internet businesses.

To view one of his websites go to:
SearchandExpose.com

Article Source: http://www.articlecube.com